

I can only hope that the FCC is wise enough not to do anything to reduce the effectiveness of the Indiana Telephone Privacy Law. Since we have been on the no-call list we have been able to enjoy supper and quality time with our children without annoying and unwanted calls which would sometimes continue until 10:00pm. Nightmares of how things were in the past were renewed during the past few months when political parties flooded our phone lines with unwanted appeals for support, and I personally could not wait until the election was over to restore the peace and tranquility in our home. I went so far as to change my vote in one case because of all the annoying calls I received for the support of a particular candidate. Since this law has been in effect there are weeks when we receive no unwanted calls and harassment, when I would have to deal with 3 or 4 calls per night on average. I can say that if the FCC decides to lessen the effectiveness of this law I personally will have to return to my previous practice of keeping a list and never purchasing any products or services from a company that bothers me with any unsolicited requests.

Thank You
